

A Brief History of Arson

Douglas Luman

Ash: prehistoric & direct union of fire. Motor where the floor of complaint & incident meet. The yard left behind — ink. Advanced from the wall & petrol. Rock to clay to show woven storm. Dry storm. The word is sometimes derived from a meadow. Means “alive.” It is Spanish for “prayer.” The modern prefer “urban disturbance.” How the ancients spoke: “space that thrives long & tall.” They name it, whoever builds it. Over the home, the subject tumbles. Digests stones. This explains the geometric black roads; moving to other parts, a lake of rose. A religious gathering like farming or weaving.

We do not know the cause.

Douglas Luman is the Book Reviews editor at the Found Poetry Review and an intern at the Chicago School of Poetics. He is falling through a tab space somewhere in northern VA.