

femscientist.c

```

/**
*****
Purpose: This program, written in C, simulates various scenarios encountered when young women enter male-dominated fields, such as the hard sciences and engineering.
Program: femscientist.c
*****
*****/

```

```

#include <women>
#include <girls>

```

```

int woman;
int man;
int expectation;
int work;

```

```

int main(science) //begin main program
{
    if(woman == man){
        return -1; //return error to main function
    }
    else while(woman != man){ //inequality function;
begin loop
        if(condescended_to){ response = mansplaining(comment); //call function "mansplaining"
                case 1: speaker = professor || boss
                    swallow(comment);
                    work = work * 2; //double work effort
                case 2: speaker = peer

```

```

        reject(comment);
        printf("/n %s", smart_ass_response);
        work = work * 2; //double work effort
    case 3: speaker = friend || parent
        reject(comment);
        expression = smile;
        work = work * 2; //double work effort
        break;
    }
    if(asked_out && asker == classmate){
        recall(group_projects); A1 = ask_self("Did %p take my ideas seriously?", asker); A2 = ask_self("Did %p assign me menial tasks?", asker);
        if(A1 = no || A2 = yes){ //return answers
to above questions
            printf("No.");
        }
    }
    calc(expectation){
        expectation = work*100 + likeability*200 + appearance*300;
        realistic = work*time + knowledge +
experience - minority status;
    }
    if(expectation > realistic){ do{
            set fucks = 0;
            experiment(hair_color);
            embrace(positive_self_concept);
        }
    }
    if(successful){
        salary = male_salary * 0.76;
        likeability = likeability - 100;
    }
    else{

```

```
        exit;
    }
}
return 0;
}
```

Claire Castaneda is a medical student living in Iowa City, IA. Her poetry was recently published in Door is a Jar. She writes and bakes when she can sneak in the time. She is always chasing the perfect ciabatta.